Vassilikou Aikaterini

Director of Research

She holds a PhD in Social Sciences-Sociology from Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University (2005). She has worked at the Academy of Athens since 2000, initially at the International and Constitutional Institutions Research Office and subsequently as a researcher at the Research Centre for Greek Society. She holds two undergraduate degrees: one from the Department of Political Science and Public Administration of the Law School of the University of Athens (1987), and another in Philosophy, specializing in Sociology, from Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University (1990). She pursued further postgraduate studies at Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne University, where she obtained two postgraduate diplomas: a Diplôme d'Études Approfondies (DEA) in 1991 and a Diplôme d'Études Supérieures Spécialisées (DESUP) in 1992. During her postgraduate studies, she was awarded a French government scholarship. In 1998, she also obtained a postgraduate diploma in Health Sociology from the National School of Public Health in Athens.

Her research focuses on women's migration, domestic work, migrant networks, transnational family, new diaspora and the sociology of health.

At the Academy of Athens, she has participated as a researcher in a number of research projects conducted by the Research Centre for Greek Society, including studies on the economic and social impacts of migration in Greece, migration and family in contemporary society, and the social consequences of the economic crisis for families and new Greek diaspora. She also participated: (1) as an expert in European research projects; (2) as a member and evaluator on committees for European social actions; (3) as a research coordinator in European programmes; (4) as a researcher in European and national projects; (5) as a member of working groups involved in drafting legislation on substantive gender equality (2016) and (6) as a member of selection committees for research and academic appointments.

From 2000 to 2013, she taught in postgraduate programmes at the National School of Public Health. During a one-year secondment to the School's Sociology Department in 2011–2012, she taught the following courses: "Methods and Techniques of the Social Sciences in Health", "Sociology of Health", "Sociology of Health Services and Hospitals" and "Applied Public Health". She also supervised postgraduate dissertations. From 2012 to 2017, she taught "Women's Migration and Migrant Networks" at the School of National Security of the Hellenic Police Academy. In 2017–2018, she taught Applied Social Science in the field of substance dependence at KETHEA, as part of the postgraduate training programme "Management and Social Planning in the Treatment of Substance Dependence". From 2016 to 2025, she was member of the teaching staff and supervised postgraduate dissertations at the Hellenic Open University in two master's programmes: (a) "Health Care Management", in the module “Sociological and Psychological Approaches to Hospitals and Health Services”; and (b) “Education Studies”, in the module “Education: Cultural Differences and Social Inequalities”. She has delivered lectures at universities and research centres in Greece and abroad and has participated in conferences and academic meetings in Greece and internationally. She has also edited and translated academic works.

Foreign languages: French, English, Spanish, Portuguese.
