4. Scientific and research activity

A. Active participation in excavation projects

I. Excavation at Tel Kabri, Western Galilee (1991, trench supervisor)

In the summer of 1991, I took part for two months in the excavation project at Tel Kabri, a Middle Bronze Age palace located in the Western Galilee. During this excavation, I participated as a member of the scientific team from the University of Heidelberg, under the direction of Professors A. Kempinski and W.-D. Niemeier, serving primarily as a trench supervisor.

II. Excavation at Rhamnous, north-east Attica (1997–2002, assistant to the director)

Systematic participation for five consecutive years in the Archaeological Society's excavation project at Rhamnous—a significant ancient deme of Attica abandoned in Late Antiquity and fortunately spared from modern development. I took part in this project as a member of the research team and as an assistant to the director of the excavation, Dr Vasileios Petrakos. For five consecutive years, I was involved daily with diverse matters relating to the Rhamnous archaeological excavation (and its wider surrounding area), as well as the excavation of the Roman cemetery of the ancient deme. In this role, my main responsibilities centred on the scientific documentation and study of dated, closed, or homogeneous excavation assemblages—mainly pottery and small finds—ranging from the Early Bronze Age to the Roman period. Four articles resulted from my participation in this project. The first three are comprehensive scholarly publications concerning prehistoric excavation finds from Rhamnous and the neighbouring site ‘Pazaraki’, which were published in the Archaeologike Ephemeris of 2003, 2019 and 2020 respectively (see list of academic publications nos. B4, B22, B23), whilst the fourth concerns the Rhamnous excavation itself and the excavation methodology developed and applied by the excavator (see list of academic publications no. B27).

III. Excavation at Tsepi, Marathon, eastern Attica (2001, acting field director)

In the summer of 2001, serving as acting field director on behalf of the Second Ephorate of Prehistoric and Classical Antiquities, I conducted a rescue excavation at the Late Neolithic settlement at the site of Tsepi in Marathon.

IV. Excavation at Agios Vasileios at Xirokambi in Laconia (director since 2025)

In February 2025, the Council of the Archaeological Society appointed me director of the excavation of Agios Vasileios at Xirokambi, with the primary aim of unifying and finally publishing the data yielded from the excavations carried out to date on the hill. As a secondary objective, I am tasked with continuing and completing the excavation of selected archaeological buildings and complexes which had previously been investigated but remained uncompleted. During the first phase of the five-year excavation and research project (August 31 – October 2, 2026), which was approved by the Central Archaeological Council (KAS), pre-excavation work was carried out and a large number of finds from the systematic excavation of the 2008–2021 period was recorded at Rigou-Apothiki (near Amykles). The documentation initially focused on the material to be included in the publication of Building A, as well as on the finds from the Courtyard and the West and South Stoa, the publication of which is at an advanced stage.

B. Archaeological documentation, study and publication of findings from past excavations

I. Excavation at Analipsis, near Vourvoura, on the Arcadia/Laconia border (excavation carried out in 1950, 1954–1958 and 1961).

The main body of my doctoral thesis was based on the documentation, study, and drawing of the funerary finds from the Mycenaean tholos tombs at Analipsis in Kynouria. This research was conducted at the National Archaeological Museum in 1991. The finds themselves were excavated by the Archaeological Society under the direction of Konstantinos Romaeus in 1950, 1954–1958, and 1961. This analytical yet comprehensive study was submitted to the University of Heidelberg in December 1994 and published in 1998 in the Library of the Archaeological Society of Athens (see list of academic publications, no. A1).’

II. Excavation at Halai Araphenides (excavated in the 1920s and especially in 1956–1957)

This volume contains the excavation records from the Archaeological Society’s digs at the sanctuary of Artemis Tauropolos in Loutsa (Halai Araphenides), conducted by Ioannis Papadimitriou in 1956 and 1957, and previously by Nikolaos Kyparissis in the 1920s. The processing and documentation of this archive, which took place in 1997 and 1998 at the Archaeological Museum of Brauron, along with the subsequent study of the artifacts, led to the comprehensive publication of the excavation finds in 2013. This two-volume monograph was published in the ‘Πραγματεῖαι της Ακαδημίας Αθηνών’ (see list of academic publications, no. A2).

III. Excavation of the prehistoric acropolis of Brauron (excavation conducted in 1950, 1955-1956, 1962 and 1999-2001)

Here we are dealing mainly with the remains from the 3rd and 2nd millennia BC, which were brought to light by the Archaeological Society's excavations at the prehistoric acropolis of Brauron (hilltop and museum area) in 1950, 1955–1956, 1962 (excavations by Ioannis Papadimitriou), and 1999–2001 (excavations by Klairi Efstratiou). Here too, the emphasis is on the documentation and analysis of movable finds, primarily pottery and small finds. The final publication is scheduled to be issued by the Library of the Archaeological Society of Athens. To date, four articles have been published relating to excavation finds from the prehistoric acropolis of Brauron; these consist mainly of preliminary presentations resulting from my participation in as many international conferences (see list of academic publications nos. B11, B20, B21, B28).

IV. Excavation of the Mycenaean acropolis at Athens (excavation conducted in 1864-1874 and 1885-1890)

The documentation, study, and publication of hitherto unknown Mycenaean material from the acropolis of Athens, recently identified at the National Archaeological Museum, constitute my current project at the Academy of Athens. This material consists of a large number of wooden boxes containing Mycenaean artefacts (mainly pottery) originating from the extensive excavations of the Archaeological Society, which were carried out between 1885 and 1890 by Panagis Kavvadias and Georg Kawerau. Additionally, the project includes the study and publication of the Mycenaean material currently housed in the storerooms of the Weiler Building, which was originally unearthed during the excavation for the foundations of the Old Acropolis Museum conducted between 1864 and 1874 by Panagiotis Efstratiadis.

The study and publication of this material are expected to shed light on many hitherto unclear aspects of the character of the Athenian acropolis, not only during the Mycenaean palatial period (14th–13th centuries BC) but also during the pre-palatial (17th–15th centuries BC) and post-palatial periods (12th century BC). At the same time, it will lay the foundations for a detailed comparison of the material from the acropolis of Athens with those of other Mycenaean palatial centres in the Argolid (Mycenae, Tiryns), Messenia (Pylos), Laconia (Agios Vasileios), Boeotia (Orchomenos, Glas) and Thessaly (Iolkos). To date, the cataloguing and documentation of the Mycenaean pottery unearthed during Panagiotis Efstratiadis's excavations between 1864 and 1874 (Weiler Building storerooms) and part of the documentation of the Mycenaean pottery unearthed during the excavations led by P. Kavvadias (National Archaeological Museum) have been completed.
